1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of bonding a silicon nitride sintered ceramic to a metal substrate or a ceramic substrate using a metal oxide brazing material layer to bond a sintered ceramic and a metal substrate or ceramic substrate. More particularly, this invention relates to a method of using a metal oxide brazing material layer and providing a desired environment for bonding a silicon nitride sintered ceramic or metal substrate or ceramic substrate and a sintered ceramic or metal substrate. 2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, ceramics have been required to have higher strength. The ceramics are usable in various fields as a material capable of reducing weight of apparatus or the like, but there are some cases where ceramics cannot be used because ceramics are deficient in strength or toughness. For example, when the ceramics are used in automobile engine parts, ceramics may be subjected to a bending or press stress or may be used for a part such as a piston or the like which is subjected to a severe environment. It is known that in the metal substrate or ceramic substrate, strength of the substrate itself is improved by strengthening the substrate itself or reinforcing the substrate itself by increasing the number of reinforcing fibers bonded to the substrate. On the other hand, in the sintered ceramic, there is no reinforcing fiber in the sintered ceramic, and thus, there is a limit to the strengthening of the sintered ceramic itself. Moreover, there is a limit to the increase in the number of reinforcing fibers bonded to the sintered ceramic. Accordingly, there is a limit in improving the strength of the sintered ceramic by increasing the number of reinforcing fibers bonded thereto.

However, when a metal substrate or ceramic substrate is to be bonded to a sintered

ceramic through a metal oxide brazing material layer, the ceramics are strongly bonded to the metal substrate or ceramic substrate and thus a problem with respect to cracking does not occur. That is, a metal substrate or ceramic substrate having a higher strength is easily formed by bonding a sintered ceramic to the metal substrate or ceramic substrate through a metal oxide brazing

material layer. However, a conventional metal substrate or ceramic substrate bonding method which uses a metal oxide brazing material layer is carried out under a specific environment. For example, it is known that a metal substrate or ceramic substrate bonding method using a metal oxide brazing material layer is carried out under the

As a passionate manga reader, I want to develop an instinctual need to understand Japanese culture, history, and literature. To do so, I have been studying the works of Japanese artist Yukio Oda and his art collection, Oda-no-Mikoto (after the Shinto deity of fertility, war, and the country; 豊国). Intellectually, Oda's artworks often point to and represent Japanese values and mores; socially, his works are an expression of his overarching desire for the creation of Japan. Oda's presentation of manga within the context of his art collection makes me ask my own questions: How do manga creators present the message and art of Japan? Are they as conscious of the Japanese art and history that surrounds them as Oda? How does Oda-no-

Mikoto influence Oda's art and Japanese pop culture? Oda-no-Mikoto Oda-no-Mikoto was commissioned by Oda's publisher by his grandfather, Toru Tamura, in 1928. Images from Oda-no-Mikoto remain within the Tamura Corporation, and are exhibited as an art collection in Tokyo. Oda refers to it as “my collection,” highlighting its importance to his life. The collection was officially opened to the public in March, 1928. Its first exhibition, held in the Biwako Theatre (比叡劇場), was an opportunity to introduce Oda-no-Mikoto to the world. The exhibition was inaugurated with the slogan “Japan’s Man and His World of Art” (日本の男とその芸術の世界). In 1929 the exhibition travelled to Osaka, Nagoya, Yokohama, and Fukushima. One of Oda's panels for Oda-no-Mikoto, titled “Promise” (御約束), features a woman and a baby. The woman is wearing traditional clothing with her face painted in a god's mask, her hair decorated in the style of a samurai headdress, and her body painted as if to be a shrine maiden. This image serves to relate to the female child, as a pious woman. The child is holding a pig, evoking the
