The purpose of the study is to assess the current performance of cardiac regenerative therapies in patients with severe aortic stenosis using a current scoring system. We focused on 11 patients with severe aortic stenosis treated with cardiac regenerative therapies at our institution. An etiology-based scoring system was developed to assess the safety and efficacy of these therapies in patients with severe aortic stenosis. The following 12 endpoints were assessed: (1) freedom from death during the study period (defined as freedom from death when all surviving patients were followed for at least 1 year), (2) freedom from stroke, (3) freedom from major adverse events (death, stroke, device thrombosis, and cardiac surgery), (4) New York Heart Association functional class, (5) valve area, (6) systolic pulmonary artery pressure, (7) mean pulmonary artery pressure, (8) maximal velocity of tricuspid regurgitation, (9) left ventricular end-diastolic and end-systolic volumes, (10) ejection fraction, (11) end-systolic wall stress, and (12) aortic regurgitation grade. The outcomes were evaluated in relation to patient characteristics at baseline and after therapies. A total of 15 procedures were completed in these 11 patients with severe aortic stenosis. No procedure-related mortality, stroke, or device thrombosis was observed during a median follow-up period of 4.5 years. No major adverse events were observed during this study period. Following regenerative therapies, the mean left ventricular end-diastolic volume was significantly decreased from 180 to 121 mL (P 0.05). The current etiology-based scoring system allows the assessment of the safety and efficacy of cardiac regenerative therapies in patients with severe aortic stenosis. These regenerative therapies
