Using HyperMotion Technology as a platform, the developers at EA SPORTS have further enhanced a variety of gameplay elements including Player Impact, Player Trajectory, Aerial Dribbling and Passivity Players will also have greater reaction and awareness of their opponents thanks to new Awareness Logic, which analyses positional differences based on where players were and where they are in relation to their teammates, opponents and ball, providing for more challenging and strategic gameplay. Details of the feature content are included below. "HyperMotion Technology" In FIFA 22, one of the key innovations used by the game's developer to help deliver a more authentic and real-life-like gameplay experience is "HyperMotion Technology." The technology used by FIFA 22 gives rise to a variety of new and unique features, including Player Impact, Player Trajectory, Aerial Dribbling and Passivity. "As mentioned, the core technology that we're using has been developed over the past couple of years and goes back to the design of FIFA 19," explains Greg Goodrich, Creative Director at EA Sports. "Not only is it in the title, but that enables us to do so many different things in a less time-intensive way. "Obviously, each mode is packaged in a way that is appropriate to the key content of that mode, so it's very important that we create a suite of features that give you that experience. So, we've been using the technology as a base and then adding different elements to it to enhance the experience. "One of the big things that we've done is to make the game feel more authentic. So, one of the big things that the technology allows us to do in terms of that is make the game feel more real. There's no doubt about it; when you get into a match, you're playing against a real opponent. You're playing against the AI, but the game feels more real because of the quality and the level of detail that the player feels. It's very important to us that we deliver that experience. "Another thing that the technology allows us to do is to provide additional fidelity and detail in the dribbling, in the movement, in the running, and in the passing. So, that allows us to give you a more authentic and realistic experience."
