Tips & Tricks Use the Mist Tool to Create a Soft Focus Effect There's no better way to soften the look of a picture than with a soft focus effect. Photoshop's Mist filter works great for this, but it can be a long process, as you'll have to set the opacity to a certain point before it appears. However, you can make a shortcut, in case you don't want to paint with the opacity at 100%. To do this, go to Image | Adjustments | Lens Correction. With the Active Drop-down list on, select Soften. Click OK and you'll be in great shape to go on to the next step. But first you'll have to click OK to accept the new settings. Now back in the Lens Correction dialog, click the icon to the right of the Angle slider and change it to 20. Now click OK again, to accept the new settings. Now, back in the Lens Correction dialog, click the icon to the right of the Angle slider and change it to 45. Click OK and the lens effect should now appear and appear as a gradient. You can now apply any brush or pen tool that will effect the gradient to apply the soft effect to your image. Increase the Opacity of an Image to Increase Its Picture-Pleasure Value Not all images are meant to be viewed in full. You may want to increase the opacity on the

Prolongation of life expectancy in haemodialysis patients: a role of haemoglobin levels and the comorbidity index. In dialysis patients, the relationship between haemoglobin levels and survival is not well defined. Therefore, the aim of this retrospective analysis was to determine the impact of baseline haemoglobin and comorbidity factors on the survival of a cohort of chronic haemodialysis patients. The annual mortality rate in a cohort of 148 nondialysis patients undergoing haemodialysis was compared with a cohort of 22 haemodialysis patients evaluated from November 1990 to October 1992. Haemoglobin level was the most significant independent predictor of survival in haemodialysis patients. After adjustment for age, comorbidity index (DIC index), chronic cardiopathy, diabetes, smoking, initial weekly creatinine clearance, weekly volume dialysis, and dialysis adequacy, haemoglobin level was associated with a three-fold decrease in the risk of death during follow-up. Haemoglobin levels were, in turn, strongly associated with the outcome of nondialysis patients. This study indicates that high haemoglobin levels may significantly decrease the mortality rate in chronic dialysis patients. Haemoglobin level may be related to the rate of atherogenesis and cardiovascular disease in chronic dialysis patients.The invention is concerned with the use of at least one laser for producing a narrow beam by means of which a dye is excited to fluorescence (the two terms dye and laser being used interchangeably) in order to make possible the correction of the coloration of the image of a color photographic film (the term dye refers to a substance that becomes fluorescent when irradiated by light) and then determining the luminescence image, in particular the luminance image. In accordance with the known art, three laser beams of the same wavelength and pointing in different directions (two coaxial beams and one oblique) and a prism disposed in a direction diagonal with the optical axis of the three beams, so that it is obtained an obliquely incident beam, pass through a color photographic film of a negative (or positive) image and are reflected by a reflection layer (or, in the opposite case, are absorbed in the reflection layer). The prism directs the beam, following a first circular course to the color-decomposing means (e.g., the spatial filters of a color-separating system) and the reflected and/or absorbed beams make a second circular
