WASHINGTON — The charges, announced on Monday, brought by special counsel Robert Mueller, send a signal to President Donald Trump and his inner circle that they face serious consequences for a broad range of activities, from lying to obstruction of justice. "If the press thought that just because the president's lawyers would get a letter to Mueller saying there's no pardon, then he can't do anything, then it's just completely baseless," said Larry Klayman, a conservative lawyer who has worked on political cases and who has advocated for a presidential pardon for Trump. "Mueller is well aware of that because it's going to be thrown in his face in court." The Justice Department has never formally stated that a sitting president cannot be indicted. But a president cannot be prosecuted while in office. "Our Office does not charge presidential candidates, presidents, or any other elected or appointed officials," said Joon Kim, the deputy attorney general, in a statement Monday. "The Constitution requires a process other than the criminal justice system for the response to foreign interference in the electoral process." Vance, the former U.S. attorney, told NPR that there is an old adage that "what is not illegal is not a crime." And he said that includes "talk." "Talk is all part of the process of doing your job," he said. "If you want to talk to a subject like President Trump, all of that is part of your job, and that's a part of what our investigation is about — learning how the Russia collusion allegations came about. Whether anybody colluded, there's no testimony or evidence. That's all part of the background." In a court filing released Monday, Mueller said that Cohen, who formerly served as Trump's personal attorney, "in coordination and at the direction of" the president "made false and misleading statements" to Congress about a proposed Trump Tower project in Moscow. "While President Trump has consistently denied the Russian Federation did not have compromising information about him, he now asserts it is 'fake news,' " a footnote in the document reads. "Even if Cohen's claim that the project ended before the 2016 presidential election is correct, his false congressional testimony leaves open the possibility that he falsely inflated the timing of the Moscow Project because he was aware that the project continued beyond the 2016 presidential election." The note about the project was directed at "his for-profit business of which he may have been aware as a 'personal investment' in 2016

What's New In?

In the past, as has been widely known, the internal combustion engine mounted in a vehicle is constructed such that a water pump for circulating a coolant is driven by a camshaft driven by the crankshaft of the engine. The driving force of the camshaft is transmitted to the water pump. A vane incorporated in the pump is driven by the camshaft so as to drive a cooling fan connected to the vane. It is known that the vane should be lubricated with oil which has been supplied from an oil gallery installed in the cylinder head. Further, oil in the gallery is thrown to lubricate the water pump in accordance with the speed of the engine. In view of the fact that the water pump is an object of the present invention, the coolant is made to circulate in the engine, but is not cooled to a high temperature. With the device disclosed in Japanese Utility Model Publication No. 61-8819, the vane of the pump is formed of a plastic, an expensive material, so that it is necessary to increase the length of the vane from the cylinder head to the inner wall of the housing of the pump in order to maintain the strength of the pump even if the vane is thin. With a vane having an increased length, however, the size of the vane is increased by the size of the housing, thus failing to achieve a compact pump. With the use of a thinner vane, it is difficult to maintain the strength of the vane, thus making it difficult to form the vane of the plastic. As in the known device, the oil in the gallery is thrown to the water pump with the speed of the engine, but the oil is not supplied to the water pump when the engine is idling. The present invention has been accomplished to solve the above-mentioned problems of the prior art. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide an oil supply structure for a pump of the above-mentioned type wherein an oil gallery is located at a position on the inner wall of the pump housing which is spaced from a position where oil is forced to the vane of the pump. In accordance with the present invention, there is provided an oil supply structure for a pump as recited in claim 1. Further, according to the present invention, the oil supply structure for the pump as recited in claim 2 is constructed such that an oil gallery, wherein a plurality of oil holes are formed in
