I have to push an iPhone app (a kind of social network) to an iPad. The iPhone app sends messages to the iPad. The iPhone app and the iPad have to exchange some data. I tried push notifications but it would take almost 5 seconds to send one message, which is definitely not acceptable in my case. I also tried TCP / UDP / HTTP. I found the fastest way was using HTTP. I am using a WebSockets Protocol to transfer messages. The messages are sent in chunks of 5Mb which is the maximum size for WebSockets. In fact I actually set a limit of 5Mb to avoid infinite loop. The problem is that the HTTP requests take a long time to send the 5Mb and are rarely answered by the server. I have the following questions:
