Apparently some students enrolled in the ACT English exam were not so confident in their English skills, so they all but stopped speaking out loud, thinking they wouldn't be understood by their assessor(s). And despite their best efforts, they were not at all successful. Online student Matyas Zapoly of Hungary, posted the following picture on his Facebook page on Friday. "Few of my classmates were brave enough to ask for a translation from the lady (sorry, I couldn't hear her), and she told us we didn't speak English enough, and it was our fault for not knowing how to read English. Didn't understand any of her explanation. We almost died of embarrassment, but we did it because we wanted to study here." One of the students replied to Zapoly, "Let's face it, you don't look that bad at least," to which Zapoly replied, "Thanks for the compliment. But I'm still not really happy with my result (33%, which means I failed)." Some students have reacted by sympathising with Zapoly, by asking the ACT if they can have another chance. "The English exam was a joke. And I am not interested in going to study here

Transport and accumulation of Pb and Cd in the submerged macrophyte Pistia stratiotes L. To assess the potential of the Sava River (Serbia) for Pb and Cd pollution, the accumulation of these elements in the floating macrophyte Pistia stratiotes L. was investigated in 2011-2012. Lead concentration in the shoots of the P. stratiotes sampled (0.87-2.59mg/kg DW) was significantly higher in comparison with controls (0.40-0.65mg/kg DW) and with values recorded in other metal pollution studies on this species (previously published). The level of accumulation of lead was also more pronounced in the twigs (1.37-6.02mg/kg DW) than in the shoots (0.79-2.90mg/kg DW). No effects of Cd on P. stratiotes were recorded. The greatest accumulation of both elements was detected in the roots, and less in the stems and leaves. The highest accumulation factor for Pb and Cd was 0.42 and 0.07, respectively. The interaction of P. strat
