I wasn't going to waste my time looking for it online because when it came time, I figured that I should've been on the lookout for a really good deal. I finally lucked out with a fantastic apartment, but I guess I wasn't being too thorough in the time that I was looking for a new place to rent. Since then, my apartment hunt has become an excited and stressful experience, and I'm feeling a bit lost when it comes to finding a great deal. I'm not asking if you have any tips on where I can find a good deal, I just want to know what you recommend to complete the process of finding an apartment with a few less headaches and without spending too much. ANSWER: Unfortunately, there is not a way to "go straight to an apartment." If you have never rented before it can be a little confusing and stressful as you are unsure of what you should be doing next. When your lease starts, the renter agreement includes a checklist of documents that need to be filled out and send to the landlord prior to the lease beginning. It's called a "Rental Inspection," and it's a fairly standard procedure in renting in the United States. The documents include everything from the application and security deposit to your credit report, resume and references, and the Rental Inspection requires a few pieces of information that you are usually asked at your job or when renting anywhere else. EXCLUSIVE OFFERS Get a free RentRange report on your rental history, amount of rent collected, average rent collected per unit, and more! Make Your Move smartly I moved to Chicago almost 4 years ago and I can't remember a better time for renters! Now it's 0cc13bf012
