Quantitative detection of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in water using organic chromophore-doped graphene nanosheets. A new quantitative detection method for polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) using a probe of organic chromophore-doped graphene (CDG) nanosheets has been developed. When the CDG nanosheets were dispersed in water or methanol/water mixed solution, the dissolved organic matter (DOM) of CDG nanosheets could be adsorbed on the CDG nanosheets, leading to the decrease of the nanosheets' intrinsic Raman signal. When the PAHs were adsorbed on the CDs, the CDG nanosheets could aggregate, resulting in the enhancement of the Raman signal of the CDs. The ratio of the two peaks can be used for quantitative detection of the PAHs. The method was tested for four representative PAH 6d1f23a050
