Not only did Allen not give up, he never gave up practicing. He just looked to other avenues of learning to get the practice time in. And this hard work was rewarded. Allen found a magic secret of practice and learned from it. He got it to where that every practice session resulted in improvement. Eventually, his chops came back, fully rejuvenated. Allen could then go back to playing his trumpet and have fun with it. He could actually be proud of his accomplishment. No man will ever know all the things that Allen Vizzutti has been through. When he was younger, Allen constantly wanted to be the "Iceman," and gain fame, fortune, and notoriety. Perhaps, for a time, it did seem this way to him. He said, "When I was ten years old, in the early 1950s, I used to daydream of someday acting like the real Iceman. He was a character on the televised show Iceman, and I saw him perform many times. I even played a little trumpet, at that time. You may have taken almost every picture on this blog. He even had Alex Trebek, his old friend, drive him to a couple of concerts with Trebek on his lap. Alex would call the trumpeters names, and Vizzutti would turn around and call him names. Of course, that never happened. The biggest problem is that he is a real piece of work. He was a pretty big deal in the trumpet world, and many admired him. However, you can't believe anything he says. After earning his degree, he became artist-in-residence and assistant trumpet professor at Grand Valley State University. Emerich has performed with such artists as Diana Ross, Burt Bacharach, Natalie Cole, Wayne Newton, Luciano Pavarotti, Placido Domingo, Yo-Yo Ma, Gil Shaham, Doc Severinsen, Allen Vizzutti, Renee Fleming, Sufjan Stevens, Ben Folds, and Vanessa Williams. He has recorded for hundreds of TV, movie, and video game soundtracks, and can be heard as the lone trumpet on The Blind Side with Sandra Bullock. Emerich has recorded various CDs for the Columbia, SFS Media, Naxos, New World, Dorian, Burmermusic, LML music, and Albany record labels. 5ec8ef588b
