here's a tip for those who are not knowledgeable: always make a package that reproduces the issue, include a record of what you did, and what did not work, so that you can learn from that. you will waste a lot of your own time, and possibly get frustrated, but i have found it to be the best way to figure out issues. you can't always understand why a package doesn't work if you don't know what that package does and how to recreate that package. it's a lot of work, but it's usually not that difficult, and it helps you be more helpful. if you post a bug, it is very important that you attach the log to it, and give us a lot of information. please see https://fedoraproject.org/wiki/how_to_provide_a_bug_report . don't post a bug that is not reproducible. if the problem cannot be reproduced, we may not be able to do anything for you. we've noticed that many people just post a link to something on the web, and then wait. it can take more than a few days for someone to find that package. if you post a file, make sure that the file contains what you think is necessary to explain your problem, and not just more information that someone trying to help you would need to find. if someone tries to help you, please be polite, and accept responsibility when it doesn't work. if you provide a lot of information and it still doesn't work, the chances are, no one is going to help you. also, read the packaging guide . there are many rules in there that will help you. you are also more likely to get help if you update your old packages to packages which have been tested and stable for a while.
