Chal Wahan Jaate Hain Full Video Song by Arijit Singh and kriti SanonQ: Array of pointers to structure I wanted to make an array of structure member-by-member, like this: typedef struct Node { int value; struct Node *next; }node; typedef node *node_ptr; node_ptr NODES[]; However, it didn't work. I realize that maybe it's because I haven't declared the whole array as node_ptr. But if I do, I can't do (*NODES)[0], since that doesn't work. What is the proper way of doing this? Should I make a parent typedef for node to enable array subscripting? EDIT: So, simply using node *NODES[] works, but it's not an option since node * is a pointer to a struct and we need to be able to do type-casting on the values of the structure. A: Use a typedef like typedef struct Node { int value; struct Node *next; }node; typedef node *node_ptr; node_ptr NODES[]; int main() { node_ptr p = NODES[0]; *p = {1, {0}}; p = NODES[1]; printf("%i ", (*p).value); p = NODES[2]; printf("%i ", (*p).value); }
